

SERIES BIBLE UNDONE

Genre : Romantic Drama
Format : Season 1:10, 50-minute episodes
Setting : Modern-day Hollywood, CA
Tone Reference : Intimate realism of Netflix's Love + the emotional excavation of Hulu's Normal People + the cultural sharpness of HBO's Insecure

The Undone Series Bible is the original work of BearTigerProductions. Undone is a story about the spaces we occupy — physical, emotional, and cultural — and the ways love demands we traverse them. Attraction can be electric but insufficient when unexamined histories collide. Hollywood offers glamour, but also intimacy: shared coffee, late-night music, small victories, and unspoken tension.

This series explores how trauma, race, family expectation, inherited and societal bias shape love. Kehlani and Jake are both right and both wrong. Their story isn't about fantasy. It's about real love in real life: messy, awkward, fragile, and occasionally devastatingly beautiful.

This is not a "can interracial couples survive?" story.

It's about:

- Emotional readiness vs emotional intensity
- The difference between loving someone and understanding them
- How trauma shapes intimacy
- The quiet ways bias survives inside "good" people

Hollywood is not glamorized; it's intimate, cramped, artistic, fragile. Apartments, park benches, late-night taco stands, backyard house parties.

Love feels close enough to breathe.

The tone is intimate but cinematic: long silences, hand-held closeness, conversations that linger beyond the punchline.

This is a show about love that's not tidy, and about the courage required to choose it anyway.

A guarded city girl and an All-American country boy fall fast in La-La Land, but can their spark bridge their worlds?

- Warm
- Intimate
- Character-driven
- Romantic and funny, but emotionally grounded
- Humor through contrast and personality

THEMES

- Stability vs. Independence
- Love vs Readiness
- Interracial intimacy beyond aesthetics
- Family inheritance, emotional and ideological
- Trauma, control, and family dynamics
- Masculinity under examination
- Emotional availability in a hustle culture
- Internal and external biases, conditioning
- Whether love is enough
- Fantasy vs. Reality
- Who pays the emotional cost of love?

VISUAL MOOD BOARD

Color Palette:

- LA: Muted golds, warm ambers, soft shadows; intimate interiors
- Indiana: Cool neutrals, grays, and blues; overcast skies, Thanksgiving interiors, naturalistic lighting
- Emotional rupture: High contrast, stark white interiors, empty spaces

UNDONE

CINEMATOGRAPHY

- Handheld, naturalistic, long takes on small actions: coffee-making, brushing teeth, folding laundry
- Close framing on faces, capturing microexpressions and emotional beats
- Use of silence and off-screen sound to amplify tension

LOCATIONS

- LA: Franklin Village apartments, Los Feliz cafés, small music venues, street taco trucks, art galleries
- Indiana: Small-town streets, Jake's family home, Thanksgiving dinner table, cozy Airbnb
- Interior: House Party/Club, Kehlani's bedroom, work place, laundry space, cafe, restaurant, Matt's apartment, backyard party
- Exterior: LA streets, Front of Bodega / 7-Eleven, park, parking garage

SOUND

- Mix of diegetic music (Jake performing, parties) and indie/alt-R&B score to reflect inner emotional states
- Texts, notifications, and city ambience used subtly as storytelling tools

- Aspiring influencer, accidentally insightful
- Valley Girl energy; A true girl's girl
- Personality hire; Pop culture encyclopedia
- Hyper-verbal and emotionally expressive
- Obsessed with romantic narratives
- Fiercely protective of Kehlani
- Brings levity into heavy spaces
- Clocked Jake as serious before Kehlani did

MATT RHODES (30-40)

Jake's cousin, Supporting.
Caucasian American, Male.

- Protective of Jake in a traditional, older-brother way
- Lived in LA for 10 years, grew up in Indiana
- Successful real estate agent (high-end residential), Image-conscious
- Believes in strategy and upward mobility
- Values stability, represents security over vulnerability
- Gives advice framed as "practical" and "realistic"
- Holds unexamined racial and social biases
- Views relationships through power and optics
- Thinks love should make sense on paper

Episode 1 – “The Party”

- A chance run-in at a Hollywood house party sparks immediate chemistry between Kehlani and Jake
- What was meant to be a one-night encounter stretches into three
- They fall into an intimate rhythm: sharing a bed, making coffee, drinking, going out for dinner, and talking about everything and nothing
- Kehlani adamantly refuses to label it as “dating.” She also sets a firm boundary around sex and attempts to end things twice, convinced Jake will eventually disappear
- After trying weed for the first time, Jake accidentally reveals that he’s “in love,” catching them both off guard
- The emotional tension builds, leading to a clash over expectations and what this connection actually means
- On the third night, they sleep together - not out of pressure, but as an assertion of control.
- In the aftermath, their emotional defenses begin to crack
- Kehlani opens up about her history of sexual assault and the real reason she left home

Episode Question: Is this connection real - or is she repeating a pattern?

Episode 2 – “Exposure”

- After two weeks of staying, Jake is now living with Kehlani - unspoken, but real.
- His permanence unsettles her; she still refuses to define the relationship
- Kaylee invites them to an industry party, forcing their private dynamic into public view
- On a double date with Kaylee and her deaf model boyfriend, Albert, Jake doesn’t quite fit-socially or culturally
- Subtle racial tension surfaces in small moments and silences
- Jake overcompensates, becoming overprotective and overbearing
- Kaylee pulls Kehlani aside and questions whether Jake is right for her
- Kehlani can’t defend him, she’s no longer sure herself
- She attends a book signing for a favorite author. While there, she runs into Darrell: a blast from the past
- The interaction is brief, awkward, and unresolved..but lingers

Episode Question: Is Jake the problem or is he exposing something she can’t ignore?

Episode 3 – “Soft Places”

- Jake opens up about his upbringing, revealing more of who he is beneath the surface
- Kehlani meets his brother, Collin, over FaceTime; a glimpse into Jake’s world
- Jake asks what she wants long term and invites her home for Thanksgiving
- He begins to notice how she flinches at softness, deflecting vulnerability with humor
- Their intimacy deepens - not sexual, but emotional
- Jake performs at a CMA showcase and invites Kehlani; Kaylee tags along
- The girls feel out of place, especially Kehlani who feels quietly alienated; they leave early for Kehlani’s apartment
- Unaware, Jake dedicates a song to Kehlani, only to realize she’s gone
- Back home, Kehlani admits her feelings, convincing Kaylee to give Jake another chance
- Jake returns, hurt that she left; Kehlani pushes back, upset he put them in a position to
- feel out of place

Episode Question: What does safety feel like when you’ve never truly had it?

Episode 4 – “Main Character Energy”

- Kehlani & Jake agree on space; he leaves to stay with his cousin, Matt, for the weekend
- Jake confides in Collin over Zoom; they reconnect and perform old material, lifting his spirits
- In contrast, Kaylee’s performs her regular routine of a line of coke, filming a high-energy GRWM, then texting Kehlani for a ride to work
- Kehlani picks her up and is met by Kaylee’s overly interested father, also co-owner of the museum
- On the drive, Kehlani vents about Jake; Kaylee defends him
- Kehlani snaps: “You wouldn’t get it. Everyone loves you.” It lands deeper than intended
- Later, at an industry party, Kaylee “performs”, abuses more cocaine, and is quietly sidelined mid-conversation
- At 3:30AM, Kaylee leaves Kehlani a voicemail: calm, cutting, “You don’t push men away because they’re wrong. You push them away when they’re right.”
- Soon after, Kehlani gets a text from Darrell and agrees to meet him at a bar
- Their encounter makes her feel seen, wanted, and understood - a different kind of ease

Episode Question: Is love enough when lived experiences differ?

Episode 5 – “Homegrown”

- Growing industry interest creates the possibility of Jake staying in LA permanently
- Kehlani worries success will change him, or reveal who he really is
- They road trip to Indiana for Thanksgiving; Kaylee helps Kehlani pack, offering unsolicited fashion and family advice
- Kehlani meets Jake’s family; his mother, in particular, is visibly taken aback
- At dinner, tension builds - microaggressions, comparisons to his ex, and coded remarks surface
- Jake defends Kehlani in the moment but later minimizes it in private
- Kehlani feels humiliated, unprotected and burdened
- She and Kaylee exchange late-night voice notes, processing in real time. There’s no relief and she’s still upset with Kaylee
- Kehlani refuses to stay at his family home; they leave and get an Airbnb
- The next morning, they argue about race, protection, ego, and what it means to “show up”
- Kehlani begins to question whether Jake is capable of fully understanding her

Episode Question: If everyone loves the version of you that performs, who sees the one that’s struggling? And can love survive when the world has conditions?

Episode 6 – “Stay”

- Kehlani and Jake begin sleeping apart; tension simmers - both lonely, neither willing to close the gap
- Jake plays putt-putt with Matt; they unpack Thanksgiving, family dynamics, and Kehlani’s boundaries
- Matt listens, then offers a blunt, unsettling perspective, forcing Jake to confront realities he’s been avoiding
- The weight of it lingers, including, “What if the baby comes out dark? Can’t have that!”
- Jake turns to music, writing and singing to process the fracture forming between them
- Kaylee reaches out, trying to repair their friendship after her spiral. Kehlani ignores her
- Later, Kehlani gets her hair braided and opens up to her hairdresser
- Shortly after, Darrell shows up at her place with flowers and an earring she thought she’d lost at the book signing; curiosity flickers
- Kehlani and Jake meet at a park to talk. They circle family pressure, cultural differences, and what it means to feel protected
- Matt’s words and Jake’s own blind spots surface; Kehlani feels the weight of both
- Vulnerability becomes the breaking point. Jake admits he doesn’t know how to reach her
- The conversation spirals into a fight; differences sharpen into something immovable
- Kehlani lashes out, pushing him away completely, even threatening to call 911
- Both realize love alone isn’t enough and Jake exists but leaves his guitar

Episode Question: If love exposes your deepest fears, do you fight for it or retreat to safety?

Episode 7 – “Matched”

- Weeks after Jake leaves, Kehlani throws herself into routine, trying to reclaim normalcy while quietly unraveling
- The apartment feels emptier; Jake’s forgotten guitar and clothes linger like unresolved ghosts
- Kaylee, attempting to repair their friendship, convinces Kehlani to re-download Tinder “for fun”
- What begins as distraction shifts when Kehlani matches with Darrell, her ex
- Unlike Jake, Darrell immediately understands cultural nuances and emotional cues without needing explanation. Their first date feels effortless, intimate, and emotionally safe in ways that unsettle Kehlani
- Meanwhile, Jake struggles back home in Indiana, burying himself in songwriting while Collin pushes him to confront what actually went wrong
- Jake’s parents quietly circle the subject of Kehlani, exposing the family’s discomfort beneath their politeness
- Kaylee warns Kehlani that safety and connection are not always the same thing. Kehlani dismisses her concerns, insisting she’s simply moving forward
- After Darnell kisses her goodnight, Kehlani returns upstairs and discovers one of Jake’s hoodies still mixed in with her laundry. The emotional weight of it catches her off guard

Episode Question: Are we drawn to people who heal us or people who confirm what we already believe about ourselves?

Episode 8 – “Bloodlines”

- Jake unexpectedly returns to Los Angeles for label meetings but avoids telling Kehlani he’s back. Collin visits him in LA after a fight with their father, forcing old family dynamics back into focus
- Through Collin, Jake begins confronting the emotional patterns he inherited: conflict avoidance, politeness as protection, and the need to be liked at all costs
- Collin points out that Jake often mistakes being agreeable for being supportive. The realization forces Jake to reconsider how he handled Kehlani’s experiences with his family
- Meanwhile, Kehlani’s reconnection with Eric intensifies naturally; he cooks for her, introduces her to his frat brothers, and creates space for honesty. Darnell shares that his previous engagement ended because his partner could never fully let him in emotionally. He begins noticing the same emotional distance in Kehlani
- At the museum break room, Kaylee spirals publicly during a livestream collaboration after abusing cocaine and Adderall. Kehlani rushes to help while everyone else records the breakdown on their phones
- Later, while helping Kaylee clean herself up, Kehlani admits she misses the way Jake kept fighting for her. Kaylee quietly suggests that Jake saw parts of her she worked hard to keep hidden. Across town, Jake drives to Kehlani’s intending to see her, only to leave after witnessing Kehlani welcome Darnell into the apartment

Episode Question: Can people break generational patterns they don’t fully understand yet?

Episode 9 – “Parting Lines”

- Kehlani spends more time at Jackie's salon, finding comfort in the atmosphere and routine. The salon becomes a sanctuary filled with music, gossip, warmth, and healing
- Jackie, sharp-tongued but nurturing, quickly becomes a maternal figure in Kehlani's life
- While braiding her hair, Jackie shares stories about relationships that failed not because love was absent, but because emotional tools were missing. The conversation forces Kehlani to reconsider her relationship with Jake through a softer lens
- Meanwhile, Darnell invites Kehlani to a gallery opening, hoping to deepen their relationship. As she gets ready, old photos and videos of Jake unexpectedly resurface on her phone, emotionally destabilizing her
- Meanwhile, Jake channels the breakup into music, recording an acoustic project inspired by their relationship. Without Jake knowing, Collin uploads a clip online and the song goes viral
- Kaylee and Albert catch a movie and she speaks the entire time. For the first time, Kaylee admits she fears becoming invisible when she is no longer “performing” for people. Both aroused by the admission, the couple has sex in his car
- That night, Kehlani listens anonymously to Jake's song while Darnell sleeps beside her. Alone in the dark, she quietly breaks down crying

Episode Question: When does moving on become another form of avoidance?

Episode 10 – “Somewhere Soft”

- Months later, Jake's music career begins accelerating as industry attention grows around his deeply personal songs. Despite the success, Jake feels emotionally stagnant, unable to separate his art from Kehlani
- Collin challenges him directly, accusing him of turning Kehlani into music because songs cannot reject him back
- Meanwhile, Kehlani begins helping Jackie at the salon between styling jobs, finding comfort in the consistency and community. Jackie encourages her to stop intellectualizing every emotion and allow herself to simply feel
- Kaylee quietly enters outpatient rehab and slowly rebuilds her friendship with Kehlani without performance or chaos. She attends a group therapy session with her father which is strained, however both are moved
- They go out for coffee. Kaylee reveals how alone she felt during her parent's divorce and that he silenced her cries with money. He apologizes, she accepts, it's a moment, he takes her shopping but this time he shops with her.
- One afternoon, Jake unexpectedly walks into Jackie's salon looking for Kehlani after hearing from Kaylee that she occasionally works there. The tension is immediate and deeply familiar
- Jackie instantly recognizes the history between them and quietly gives them space to talk outside
- During their conversation, Jake admits he confused understanding Kehlani with protecting her. Kehlani admits she kept testing his love because survival always felt safer than vulnerability
- Neither fully apologizes, yet both finally speak with honesty instead of deflection, retraction, or defense
- Before leaving, Jake asks whether they simply met too early in life. Kehlani cannot answer. Instead, she watches him walk away while Jackie stands quietly behind her in the doorway. She walks back into the salon, back toward community, softness, and herself
